SKILLS

I have practised life drawing since GCSE which has left me capable of drawing from the real world, and particularly the human form. However I can also apply my imagination and sense of style to projects when needed, and am quite versatile in the range of subject matter I can tackle. Ancillary, less directly related skills I acquired from a very heavily academic secondary education include the ability to communicate ideas in both oral and written form, and to solve problems in an efficient and analytical manner.

INTERESTS

Obviously, I am in the very privileged position of being able to pursue my main interest as an area of study, and hopefully soon a career, but aside from digital art I very slowly and not very steadily nurse a sideline in "world-building" and novel-writing within that world. I also like to read, keep rats, play computer games and struggle with the classical guitar.
